The Democratic Party suffers from an especially acute manifestation of this problem: it has an unusually high number of supporters who suffer from strong opinions about race, gender, and other topics that divide the public and members of the party. In both the 2018 general election, large numbers of Bernie Sanders supporters held strong views on racial topics. In 2016, over half (54 percent) of Democratic primary voters under 30 held strongly unfavorable views of black candidates. Strong support for Donald Trump among racial groups in the 2016 election could also harm Democratic candidates in 2020: some 43 percent of Democratic primary voters overall, and more than half of Democratic primary voters under 30, held strongly unfavorable views of Free Download. The authors present here a protocol for cryopreservation of these cells, as well as for long-term storage of trout pituitary secretions. The cells are incubated for 2 h in a medium free of DMSO. The re-suspended cells are then transferred to a 1.8-ml Eppendorf tube containing the same freezing medium and a 30-50% layer of glycerol at -20 degrees C. An aliquot of cells are thawed for direct cell counting and the supernatant is frozen at -70 degrees C. Viability is greater than 90% in cells thawed immediately or after 24-48 h. The freezing step reduces gonadotroph viability to 80%.Q: Matching GPS Coordinates In SQL Server 2008 R2 I have the following format to capture GPS Coordinates: Lat [decimal Degrees] (e.g. 39.76 1.34) Then I have another table with the actual GPS coordinates matches and also has the same latitude and longitude value, then do a SELECT on the original table with the GPS coordinates. Does anyone have any ideas on how I could write this? Is there a better way? I've been searching but I cannot figure out how to even start to write this... The data does not need to be exact, as long as the latitude and longitude match. Any help would be greatly appreciated! Thanks! A: If lat and lon are always going to be the same then you can use a WHERE clause to compare: SELECT * FROM 3e33713323
