What's new in Archipelago:

of East Timor The Archipelago of East Timor (— "Long Island") is an archipelago of six major islands (Timor-Leste Islands) and several minor ones in the Lesser Sunda Islands of eastern Indonesia. The archipelago, located in the Timor Sea, is about northwest from the island of Timor. Timor and Timor-Leste (the East Timorese autonomous territory) lie directly north and northeast of the archipelago, respectively. The Timor-Leste Islands are the second most populated islands of Indonesia. East Timor and Indonesia are separated by the Timor Strait and the Timor Sea. The Timor Sea and Indonesian part of Timor Island are connected by National Road 15. Geography The Timor-Leste islands form an archipelago of approximately. It is mostly composed of volcanic hills, and can be divided into three groups: Volcanic Islands, with nine islands, Frigate Shoals with Frigate Bay, and the Dangerous Islands, the most famous of which is the island of Babeldaob (also known as the island of the giant tortoise). The highest peak of the archipelago, located on the north coast, is Belu Kecil (at an altitude of). History The legend of Melokai was recorded on the island of Baboe. The story of Melokai and his sons was described by the East Timorese first minister Paulo Abraão: The Bay of Arriaga is also described in this legend about a great tidal wave that occurred in 1170: Native Indonesian tradition as early as the Sung Dynasty, described the archipelago of Timor as Sunda Dongrek ("the 4 islands of Indonesia"). Other colonial sources also describe East Timor and West Timor with the name of "the 4 islands of Indonesia". This is derived from the Sultanate of Mataram's designation of the islands as Duar Perampuan 4, implying Great Java. This name has spread to other parts of Indonesia. Occasionally, the Sunda Islands, the area of Indonesia south of Java, is also called Sunda Dongrek ("the 4 islands of Indonesia"). In Dutch, the islands of Timor-Leste are called the Long Island. Islands of the archipelago Timor The six main islands are the largest of the Timor-Leste archipel
