Therefore, we performed this meta-analysis to evaluate the relationship between VDR polymorphisms and prostate cancer risk. Case-control studies that examined the association between VDR gene polymorphisms and prostate cancer risk were identified by searching MEDLINE, PubMed, Web of Science, Chinese Biomedical Database, and China National Knowledge Infrastructure. Pooled odds ratios (ORs) with corresponding 95% confidence intervals (CIs) were calculated to measure the strength of association. Twenty-three studies, with a total of seven single nucleotide polymorphisms (SNPs), including eight case-control studies concerning the association between TaqI BsmI, FokI and TaqI gene polymorphisms and prostate cancer risk, and 15 case-control studies concerning the association between ApaI and BsmI gene polymorphisms and prostate cancer risk, were included in this meta-analysis.
