The farm legislation in Brazil was updated in July.

The law expands from birth to 30 weeks the period in which the use of bovine growth hormone (BGH) is banned. BGH is linked with infertility in cows, increased risk of mastitis and dystocia when a cow is calving, and a negative impact on the consumer. After that, from October 1, the law also prohibits the use of this drug in veal calves and dairy calves. The Swiss group, Responsible Prodcut Association has agreed to withdraw its 2009 report, according to the Swiss daily Tages-Anzeiger. The supermarket chain Obagi planned to publish the report that lists less than ten companies that can be considered safe to use. The company wants to fulfill its ethical obligations to the public. Some 90 percent of the products, which were tested, proved to be unsafe. Marine products were the worst offenders: more than 70 percent were classified as unsafe. BPA, which is also used in the lining of metal cans, is tested and listed by the US Environmental Protection Agency. In Europe, it is not used in baby bottles. It is listed as a chemical of interest, so it must be evaluated by the EU. That said, the chemical is also used in resin for sports equipment, but that fact does not keep it from being banned in baby bottles. BPA

This utility written in AutoitV3 Scripting Language enables you to activate / deactivate Microsoft Windows XP's Security File Tab, which is disabled by default. Security Tab Fixer1. Field of the Invention The invention relates to a circuit arrangement for supplying an output current of a first switching amplifier to a load in case of a low voltage supply, with a first reference circuit for generating a first reference voltage, which is directly applied to a noninverting input of the first switching amplifier, an input terminal of a switching transistor connected to the inverting input of the first switching amplifier for being applied with a control current to be controlled by a signal supplied to an input of the switching transistor, a second reference circuit for generating a second reference voltage, which is directly applied to a noninverting input of the first switching amplifier, a clamping circuit for limiting the control current to a first reference value in case of a drop in voltage of the second reference voltage to a second reference value, and an averaging circuit for resetting the first switching amplifier to a nominal output when a voltage of the second reference voltage drops below the second reference voltage. 2. Description of the Related Art Such an arrangement is known from the article "A Simple, Compact, Low Power, 1.5 V NMOS ESD Protection Circuit with Adaptive NMOS Transistor" by M. F. Marsan in TMS of Sep. 1990, particularly FIG. 4. A circuit as described above has a first switching amplifier, which is formed as a classical amplifier, and a comparator. The comparator compares the output signal of the first switching amplifier with a voltage of a storage capacitor, which is charged by a current from the load current of the first switching amplifier. If the voltage of the capacitor drops too low because the load current of the first switching amplifier is too small, the output current of the first switching amplifier falls to a second reference current to be applied to the load. In this instance, the first switching amplifier is switched off or is switched into a corresponding protection mode. The disadvantage of such a circuit arrangement is the fact that the amplifier is switched off when a load current falls below the second reference current and, thus, protection is no longer provided for the switching amplifier.
