Sink on Sales Slump Starbucks (NASDAQ:SBUX) is a very busy company these days, and it's now showing signs of slowing down. Same-store sales slumped in the company's last quarter, and it has lowered its profit outlook. Following are the highlights of what's happening in the company's latest performance: Same-store sales fell 3.2%, which is down from the 4.6% decline in the previous quarter. Starbucks' worst-performing store was in the U.K. Same-store sales in the first quarter of fiscal 2014 were flat, which is better than the 1.3% decline that analysts were expecting. Revenue at Starbucks restaurants was up 2.1% compared to the previous year, which is less than the 4.2% rise that analysts were expecting. Sales in Europe, the Middle East, and Africa, which make up 47% of Starbucks' global sales, were up 2.6% compared to the previous year. Cost of sales fell 2.1% compared to the previous year. That's less than the 2.8% decline analysts were expecting. CEO Howard Schultz said that a shift away from the company's Costa Coffee brand will have an impact on earnings in the coming year. The Costa brand is up for sale, and it generated 11% of sales in the quarter.

Schultz added that the company has "experienced growth from its best-performing segments in recent years and has made significant progress in the areas that matter most to consumers and investors." He added that he is encouraged by the company's progress. Last week, the company took a big step toward splitting the company into two firms: one for the retail side of the business, which will take on the "famous" Starbucks name, and the other for coffee technology, which will focus on creating new beverages and espresso drinks. The retail business will be run by Schultz, while the coffee technology company will be managed by three

Americans are suffering through one of the most nonsensical, scaremongering, fear-filled, race-baiting, and divisive presidential campaigns in a generation, yet there is one central issue that could unite us all in a common and strong cry: “Better late than never!” Once again, we are faced with the impossibility of finding concrete answers in a constantly shifting landscape of lies and half-truths, and the insanity of what this year's Republican nominee is declaring both his true views and what he will actually do once he is elected president. At last, it is apparent that the emergence of Donald Trump's many lies is not about keeping secrets – he doesn't give a damn about those – but rather the result of him being unable to hold onto one coherent lie for more than a day. Trump is a liar. It's the primary qualification for becoming president of the United States. Today's new Donald lie: "We'll see what happens." From the moment he announced his candidacy, Trump has delivered the most outlandish and reckless promises on the planet – an end to foreign wars, a three-day weekend for those who work, the closing of the borders, the banishment of Muslims, the building of an impregnable wall along the entire border with Mexico, the elimination of any and all federal employees who are not Muslim, the obliteration of the Environmental Protection Agency, the complete withdrawal of the US from the Paris Climate Accord, and on and on and on. These were simply the only promises he could make and stick to, because he can't, or won't, actually do anything. There is no way to be sure what he would
