Leukophthalmos: diagnosis, classification, and evaluation. A number of ocular surface anomalies are associated with leukophthalmos. These conditions range from keratopathy to chronic corneal epithelial breakdown, scleral thinning, and induced conjunctivalization of the retrobulbar space. Diagnosis is often difficult because of the similarity in appearance of this syndrome to other more congenital manifestations of microphthalmos. Evaluation of the cornea and globe may include transillumination, retroillumination, gonioscopy, and tonometry. Because of the literature findings regarding symblepharon formation, the anterior segment components of the eye need to be carefully examined in children. Careful application of tape lifts may be helpful, although it is usually best to wait until the eyelids are comfortable and relaxed prior to elevating the lash orifices. The ocular surface is the most vulnerable for mechanical damage in leukophthalmic patients. Because of the potential corneal ulceration, simple irrigation with normal saline should be performed on a regular basis. Prognosis for restoration of vision is reasonable in similar cases of microphthalmos and congenital aqueous channel defects, and surgical intervention may be reserved for heavily scarred patients or those with much compromised lids. Q: Delphi: How to implement an autocomplete text box I am creating an app and I want to implement an autocomplete text box (the one that the user types and then the user types something more and the text box starts matching) like in Outlook where you type or the name and it automatically shows you what you have typed. A: Similar to standard Delphi autocomplete behavior you could handle a TCustomComboBox Enter event handler to determine what should be the next item in the list and then pass the current entry (of type TCustomComboBox) to a descendant component which will provide the lookup / service data. Take a look at the TDataSourceCustomComboBox component for inspiration, which was created by a fellow MVP on codeproject. Your mission is to take your first flight, but first you need to make it to the sky, so you can take your first steps. You'll need to use the given controls to stay in the air. To save your life, you'll need to avoid obstacles and rely on falling into some craters on your way to the sky. You'll need to keep your wings aligned and your head vertical to keep from crashing into the ground. At the end of the level, you need to reach the sky. After the first flight, you'll be able to discover more challenges and additional levels. Levels / Playtime: The game has 7 levels with a total duration of about 3 minutes each. You can unlock them as you progress through the story or in every second level you complete (if you continue) within the time limit of 10:00. There are hidden areas in some levels, where you can find the feathers of some enemies that need to be collected in order to unlock the next area. You can also collect the feathers of the "featherlings" which are little enemies that live on the landscape. They are quite dangerous, especially in the big boss levels where they can devour your bird if they aren't already dead. There are two major mechanics in the game: Climbing and Falling. You'll need to keep your wings and head aligned in order to be able to climb. If you lose your head orientation, you'll fall and you can only recover by touching the ground. You'll also need to try to do flips in order to escape enemy attacks and fall through narrow gaps. There are lots of obstacles to avoid and enemies to avoid too, but the developers of the game were really cautious not to make the game too stressful. You can also collect some feathers of enemies, which you can use to unlock the next area. Also, you can collect the feathers of some little enemies that are hidden on the terrain and that you can find on the floors of some levels, if you collect enough of them. If you're playing on iPhone X, the game will autohide the notch while scrolling the screen, so you won't see it. Controls There are two basic control styles: With tilt and with pinch. You'll be able to control your bird with the tilt of your device. To move, tilt the device in any direction. To tilt up, tilt your device upwards. To tilt down, tilt your device downwards. And to fly, tilt your device back and forth. The tilt controls
