Recent studies have demonstrated that mitogenic stimulation of T cells by antigen and Con A, individually, is a potent suppressor of cytotoxicity mediated by the T cell. Interleukin 2 (IL2) is a pivotal agent in the stimulation of T cell growth and function. Thus, the question arises as to whether antigen or Con A stimulate T cells in a manner which is also inhibitory to T cell-mediated cytotoxicity. The overall hypothesis will be tested that antigen or Con A stimulation of T cells induces a functional inactivation of T cells which may be clinically relevant. The role of exogenous stimulation of T cells by Con A on the induction and expression of inactivation of immune effector functions will be examined. In addition, the inhibitory effects of antigen or Con A on the induction of natural cytotoxicity will be assessed. Specific aims are: 1. To determine the functional inactivation of T cells during T cell stimulation with antigen or Con A. The dose response will
