The business behind the music: 'The Voice' creator teams up with Spotify on a new spinoff show Mark Roberti/Epsilon/Getty Images For The Voice Alicia Keys is part of the judge's panel and can be seen next to Adam Levine, left, and Blake Shelton. Alicia Keys is part of the judge's panel and can be seen next to Adam Levine, left, and Blake Shelton. (Mark Roberti/Epsilon/Getty Images For The Voice) Edward Copeland, Tom Hanks and Adam Levine are among more than 80 people who will star in a new show, "The Voice: Bloodlines" on Netflix. Singer Shelton and songwriters Levine and Usher Raymond are executive producers for the series, which debuts on Friday. The show is a spinoff of the popular show. It centers on 12 talented musicians vying for a recording contract with one of three judges: Keys, Levine and Shelton. The series will follow the trajectories of the contestants as they progress through the competition, which uses coaches' mentoring, performance evaluations and blind auditioning to determine who will reach the live shows. Netflix said the series was created with the "Voice" technology and format in mind. "We're using the Voice's best-of-breed technology from production and auditioning to navigation and voting," said Ted Sarandos, chief content officer for Netflix, in a statement
