The best answer to each one of our customer`s requests is nothing but a software product. .Q: How to do a `std::ostream_iterator` in a loop to generate a string? I'm new to C++ and I know I can do something like: `std::ostream_iterator<string> strIter{"Hello"}; std::ostream_iterator<string> strIter2{"World"}; std::copy(strIter, strIter2, std::ostream_iterator<string>(cout, " "));` However, is there a way to generate `strIter` and `strIter2` in a loop (just one by one like a For loop) to make it look like (or to be more precise) something like this: `for(std::string strIter; "Hello" != " "; ++strIter) { std::ostream_iterator<string> strIter; std::ostream_iterator<string> strIter2{"World"}; std::copy(strIter, strIter2, std::ostream_iterator<string>(cout, " ")); }` Is that a good approach? A: You should prefer `std::copy(std::begin(s), std::end(s), std::ostream_iterator<string>(cout, " "));` The reason is that you don't need the loop at all: `begin()` and `end()` return iterators to the first and the last elements, and `std::copy()` will work for the range they return. If the range is from the first to the nth element and you want to use a single loop, you can use `std::advance()` to step over any unprocessed data: `for (std::ostream_iterator<string> s(std::cout);`
