coreldraw x7 has the advantage of supporting layers and adjustments, which makes it easier to create artwork. when a new document is created, the first option that appears is the layers option. layers are like compartments, and designers can create layers that hold elements that don't need to be repeated. the smart carver, available with corel photo-paint, let users trim unwanted objects from images, perfecting the design for the final product. this powerful new feature in coreldraw x6 is now available in coreldraw x7. coreldraw x6 was built to handle larger and more processing-intensive files, so 64-bit and multi-core support sped up designers workflows. styles let designers create a consistent appearance across all of their assets, whether creating multiple drawings, documents, and text. users could create designs in coreldraw and open them up in swish maximax 2 to animate them. the pixels mode let designers see exactly how their creations would look when hosted online, to ensure the final exports could be created with minimal changes and back and forth between the final destination and coreldraw. a new version of coreldraw x7 was released in april 2011 with significant improvements in both the creative and technical sides of the software. the new version has a streamlined interface that makes it easy to use, and a new "pixels" mode that is ideal for web designers. it also comes with all of the latest features that modern professionals need, including a completely revamped color management system that allows for color consistency across platforms, including support for pantone color profiles.
