
Windows 10 X64 Enterprise LTSC Build 14393 En-US Sep 2016 {Gen2} Download PORTABLE

Common features remain the same between the new LTSC release and Windows 10, including the Windows Subsystem for Linux (WSL), Features page, Microsoft Defender, Windows Defender antimalware, a single Microsoft account and account management app, parental controls, and a Windows Store of sorts that includes Microsoft-made and third-party apps. Build 14393 (first non-technical beta in the LTSC era) was codenamed Redstone. The "Redstone" codename was retired because it's a stone (check the stone rollover wiki page) and because Microsoft decided it could have been potentially confused with Windows 8.1. The second non-technical beta is Build 17763 ; the first non-technical beta for "Leap" had been codenamed Blue. Windows 10, Build 17763, codenamed "Bolton" replaces the "Leap" schedule, with releases every six months (i.e., every six months, not six years).

Microsoft has issued a far-reaching and highly-criticized patch for the operating system. Windows 10v2018 and Windows Server, a milestone release, was supposed to offer enterprise-grade, unified management features to bring the consumer-focused Windows 10 interface together under management control. Key enterprise features like System Center Configuration Manager 2016 and Windows Intune, a consumer-targeted mobile management and security software, were only in beta. Here's a breakdown of Build 14393.0 vs. earlier builds for Windows 10, although

Microsoft's typical naming convention does not necessarily reflect reality here. Windows 10 Pro Windows 10 Enterprise Windows 10 Enterprise LTSC (aka Windows 10 Enterprise LTSC 2016) Windows 10 Enterprise LTSC (aka Windows 10 Enterprise LTSC 2019)
