Q: Conflict of global variable in JavaScript Please see the code below: `var a = 0; var b = 0; var x = 1; function f(){ a = 0; b = 0; var x = 1; x = 2; } f(); console.log(a,b);` The answer of this code is "undefined undefined". But I want to get "1 1" as the answer. Is there any method to solve this?

A: You need to call your `f()` function like `f(); console.log(a,b);` because in the inner scope `b` is not available to `f()`. `f` is not "global" by definition, so it should be called like this.

A: By default, a function's scope is the local variable namespace of the function. This means that `b` is only accessible inside `f`.

System Requirements:

- Windows 7 - Display Resolution: 1920x1080 - Speakers: High-end stereo speakers with at least one subwoofer are required Audio: - Headset requirements: Audio Input devices such as headsets and microphones are required for the various dialogue sequences. - Audio codec: Realtek AC 97 driver - Audio settings: 96Khz - Audio device: Intel HD Audio - Audio Interface: High-quality audio chip such as High Definition Audio (HD-Audio) or Creative Soundblaster Live!
