"Today, at MAX, we are excited to show off new innovations in editing that make the most sophisticated image editing app even smarter, more collaborative and easier to use," said Betsy Morris, Chief Product Officer, Adobe, who kicked off a call-and-text back with press. "It's our commitment to bring advancements across the desktop experience to the web application, making it more accessible and easier to use. Not only will these new tools continue to push the boundaries of image editing even further, they will bring the vision of pixels to all." While the new features for Photoshop desktop are mainly in the realm of AI, there are still some new features just for the user. Illustrator has ditched the traditional Save for Web template, allowing users to store Illustrator files in the cloud--meaning that you can edit a file and then close a Tab in Safari and your changes will be saved in the cloud. Those files will be available in the Cloud in the future. Also new for 2020, Adobe XD now allows users to create prototypes using the experience of Adobe XD for Websites and APlus Design. By embedding code, you can create prototypes of websites or apps with custom CSS. Other new feature additions to Photoshop desktop are: New brush options for all Adobe Stock products, including replacing and erasing; an extensions panel that allows users to download custom extensions and themes; and the release of a Mac version on the Mac App Store. Meanwhile, Adobe has also added new notes in the Shapes Panel and a new Status Bar so you can easily see coordinates and angles when you're editing and measuring in the Lasso Tool.
