It has 24GB of storage and disk space is set to the maximum size allowed by the Amazon Storage service. The question I have is: can I create a VMDK file and attach it to an OpenNebula instance which allows the storage to be external to the AWS storage rather than being a part of the OpenNebula's own instance's storage? A: You'll need to have external storage available somewhere. In short, you can do this using block storage drivers such as OCFS2. This page shows an example in the comments. I know this sounds bad but it's unavoidable due to the current way the storage layer is implemented in OpenNebula.
